Assessing Your Program Portfolio

Assessing Your Program Portfolio

Whether facing an economic challenge or charting a course to "scale-up" for greater impact, organizations often struggle over which programs to invest in and which to phase out. In some cases, stakeholders feel emotionally attached to a program long after it has run its course; in other cases a highly impactful program is difficult to sustain financially and needs to be reimagined. In every case, having the right filter for making smart decisions will help an organization to achieve its vision and inspire confidence in stakeholders that the right path has been selected.

An effective rubric for making decisions about an organization's program portfolio – adapted from models employed by Ramapo for Children and Fiscal Management Associates – considers both the financial cost of a program as well as its impact according to several criteria. The following pages outline the three steps in assessing the value of a program, and should be used as a tool for honing an organization's portfolio of offerings and shaping its strategic direction – to be further developed through a detailed business plan.

Step 1: Program Impact Analysis

Every program run by the organization should be analyzed on a scale of 1 (low impact) to 5 (high impact) for each of the criteria below. Criteria may be revised or qualified as needed. When conducting this exercise it is important to incorporate constituent perspectives which may be derived from satisfaction surveys or other methods.

Degree to which program or service is	Program A	Program B	Program C
Aligned with the core mission
Well-executed?
Serves many people relative to other programs/services? (Scale)
Deeply serves individuals relative to other programs/services? (Depth)
Fills a gap in community services/offerings?
Builds the organization's reputation/public profile?
Leverages resources for the organization's other programs/services?
Total
Average

Step 2: Program Profitability Analysis

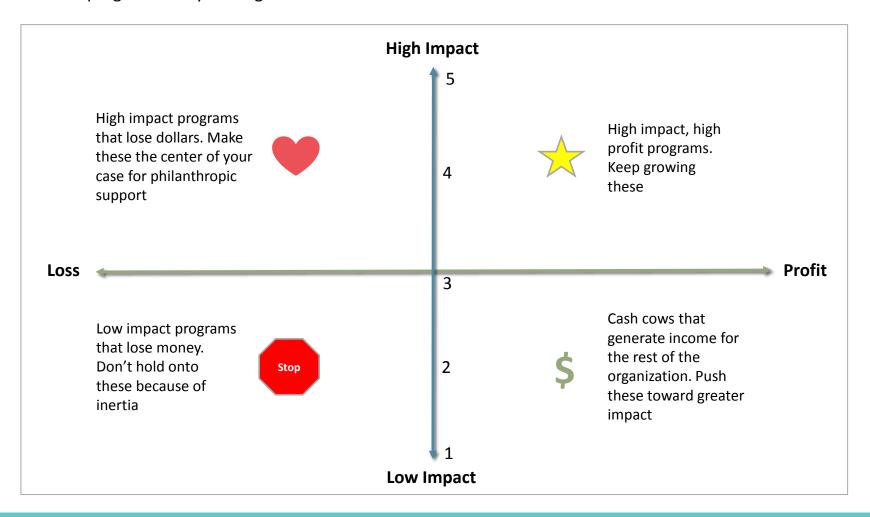

Every program run by the organization should then be evaluated for its profitability using a rubric such as the one below. Footnotes can be found on page 6.

Program A	Program B	Program C

Step 3: Program Portfolio Scatter Chart

Finally, plot all programs on the scatter chart below to spark a discussion about the strategic value of each program run by the organization.

Footnotes to the Program Profitability Analysis

¹ Assigned unrestricted donations/grants are not restricted to a particular program but were generated as a result of that program. An example is an unrestricted major gift that was given to a community center from a participant who clearly made the gift because of their child's positive experience in day camp. The gift would therefore be "assigned" to day camp for the purpose of the profitability analysis. The same is true for membership dollars, which are considered tax-deductible contributions by the IRS. High-performing membership organizations periodically survey members to understand the reasons—including particular programs—that led them to join. Membership dollars are then allocated to each program by the appropriate percentage.

² The Personnel category should include both salary and fringe benefits. Employees whose roles are distributed across multiple programs should allocate their salaries and benefits according to the percentage of their time spent on each program. The following is an example of a simple rubric that may be used:

Employee	Program A	Program B	Program C	General Mgt.	Fundraising	Total
Program Manager	30%	15%	10%	20%	25%	100%
Program Assistant	20%	15%	15%	40%	10%	100%
COO	15%	15%	15%	50%	5%	100%
Program Total	65%	45%	40%	110%	40%	300%
Allocation	22%	15%	13%	37%	13%	100%

³ Shared OTPS Expenses are those that cannot be attributed directly to one or more programs but are shared across programs. These expenses can be allocated on the basis of percentage of full-time equivalent (FTE) personnel in each program or another allocation method such as the percentage of facility square footage occupied by each program or percentage of program expenses relative to other programs.
